

The program learning outcomes for counseling are as follows:

- Students will demonstrate counseling knowledge and skills for working with diverse populations and ethnic groups
- Students will demonstrate knowledge of theories of individual and family development across the life span
- Students will demonstrate an understanding of essential interviewing and individual and group counseling skills
- Students will demonstrate an understanding of basic concepts of standardized and nonstandardized testing and other assessment techniques
- Students will demonstrate abilities to use technology and statistical methods in conducting research and program evaluation
- Students will demonstrate knowledge of the identity, history, and philosophy of the counseling profession in general, and their particular counseling programs
- Students will demonstrate knowledge and the ability to apply ethical standards of the ACA and related entities and legal codes specifically related to the practice of community counseling, school counseling, and student affairs
- Students will demonstrate an understanding of career theory and career counseling techniques, including career assessment